

The Daily Gazetteer.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25. 1738.

918 807.

HO' I have often wonder'd, that the Government should be guilty of just as many Faults, and deserve just as many Animadversions, as there are Weeks in the Year; yet, since I am assur'd that the Craftsman and Common Sense do not write for Pay, nor can be influenced by any other Motive than a Desire to serve their Country, I am convinced of their Sincerity, and deserve myself their Disciple. They have used the Language of December, the Privilege of Slaves, with great Facility: And, as we are in a State of Slavery for the whole Year, I see no Reason for confining our Leontidas to one Month. Every Saturday should, I think, be an Holiday for Wit. To me, I confess, it is a Day of Instruction; and I am prompted by the Craftsman to recommend the System, which I have collected from these political Lectures. Their Authority I assert,

I. That whoever holds an Office under the King, is a mean and mercenary Wretch. [I have not been bold to say this in the most publick Assembly, in Father's hearing,]

II. But that an Office under a Subject, is not honourable, and may be convenient.

III. That an Army continued from Year to Year, Authority of Parliament, is a Grievance; and, being officer'd by Men of Quality and Fortune, more dangerous.

IV. But that Stratocracy is the best Form of Government; that the Army therefore should be independent on the General; and that the principal Officers, and especially my Uncle, should hold their Commissions for Life.

V. That the Repeal of the Riot Act will make the Country unnecessary.

VI. That whatever is popular, is palatable.

VII. That Gin therefore is not Poison; and that it is to restrain the good People of England from exhilarating themselves with the Cordial, which they affect.

VIII. That the King ought not to take it amiss, that his poor Subjects are made merry at his Expence.

IX. That the Laws, which forbid any slander of his Person, Title, or Government, being made for the publick Good, do not bind Patriots.

X. That what is called by Courtiers Faction and Division, is as requisite in the State, as the Wind and Tide in the Ocean.

XI. That a wise Prince should encourage a little Opposition to the Court.

XII. That no Government can be safe, that is always in Danger.

XIII. That whoever misrepresents the People, or is subject to the King, lies, and deserves to be hanged.

XIV. But that the King may be represented, in Shape, to the People.

XV. That there never was, and never can be a Plot against the Legislature, Kings, or Magistrates.

XVI. But that it is barbarous, to draw Caricatures of young Patriots; because such Descriptions may irritate them too much against their own Imperfections, and their rising Virtue, and, by discouraging their Attempts to establish their Reputation as Orators, deprive the Nation of a Demosthenes, and a Cicero.*

XVII. That Divines, Lawyers, and Physicians, particularly Dr. Gold, are fit Objects of Ridicule.

XVIII. But that Trade is a Mystery, and the Character of Merchants sacred, to suppose them capable of Deceit, tho' they profess the Art of Gain, being Affectionate to the Mob, who call themselves Merchants.

XIX. That a Writer of the Country Party may legitimate an overgrown Minister, for being fat and pleasent.

XX. But that it is the blackest personal Calumny, that his strippling Rival is lean and hungry.

If it should be surmised, that they, who censure Ministers now, desire to be Ministers themselves, and may serve their King in a future Reign; I answer, 'His Ministers then will be the Ministers of the People; and therefore it is clear,

XXI. That it is the Interest of a Reversioner to promote Law Suits against the Tenant for Life, and to support the Tenants of the Manor in their Incroachments upon the Royalty, which they make only for the Heir's Sake.

*Vade, age, & Ascanio, si jam puerile paratum
Agmen habet secum ---- (sic) se se offendat in Armis.*

Having extracted from the Anti-Ministerial Papers the foregoing Rules for Invective, I shall now transcribe some Directions for Compliment.

Flattery is more particularly the Growth of Courts.

The Devil, as King James said in one of his Speeches to the Parliament, is a busy Bishop.

Therefore Bishops are busy Devils.

Therefore Bishops and Court-Chaplains must not be credited, when they relate the Behaviour of a dying Princess.*

How much more Just will the Account be, which we have Reason to expect from one, who is no Courier, and yet attended constantly at Court during her last Illness, that he might have the best Intelligence?

A Lover of Truth should be very cautious in his Panegyric; lest, when he intends a Copy of Queen Mary's Picture, a Virtuoso should say, 'It is prodigiously like Cardinal Mazarine.'

But yet, if my Uncle were a General-Officer, I might without Offence compare him to Leontidas; because the Violence of the Compliment may be imputed to Affection, Gratitude, and Nepotism.

For the same Reason, tho' I may abuse a Minister for building a fine House, I may commend a Patriot for having a fine Garden, adorn'd with Temples, Statues, Busts, Obelisks, and Gravel Walks.

And for this Taste, if not for his Eloquence, he may be called Hertenfus.

There is no Impropriety in gracing a Bust of the Black Prince, in his Descendant's Museum, with the Inscription, ' Magni Exemplari suo.'

But it is fulsom, to say of a King on the Throne, that He is as Just and as Brave, as the most Renown'd of his Predecessors.

I once thought, that Milton was a tolerable Poet and Assertor of Liberty: But his Fame is now diminished by the Author of an Epic Poem lately published, plann'd upon a more interesting Subject than Paradise Lost, or the Fate of Mankind, flowing in the most harmonious Numbers, abounding with the noblest Sentiments, and representing one continued Battle.

It is the Duty, not only of a Friend, but of an Englishman, to celebrate what does so much Honour to our Country.

*Baccare frontem
Cingite, ne Vati noceat mala Lingua futuro.*

It is likewise prudent to applaud so great a Genius, who, like his Hero at Thermopylae, when his Friend is attack'd, may interpose his Assistance, and tho' not addicted to Panegyric, may, out of Gratitude as well as publick Spirit, expole the Baseness of aspersing One, who in every Situation hath conducted himself in the neatest and discretest Manner, and by his Thirst after Learning, hath given Reason to expect Actions suitable to so happy and singular a Beginning.†

For my own Part, upon the first Appearance of Leontidas, which has been so justly preferred to the Iliad, Aeneid, and Paradise Lost, I congratulated this Metropolis, and cry'd out in a fit of Rapture, ' The Time is now come, when City Poetry shall no longer be the Foundation of City Pyes and Custards.'

But, I confess, I am deceived in my Expectation. This divine Poem has not yet been honour'd with a second Edition; and many Volumes of the first Impression well bound and well gilt, still glitter in the Shops, without Hopes of a Purchaser. There cannot be a greater Proof of the Ignorance and Corruption of this Age. Milton indeed, in politer Times, met with the like Treatment. But the Wits and Criticks in Vogue did not favour him: Whereas Mr. G—— may flatter himself, (and Self Flattery in this Case, is Self Defence) that the best Judges of Poetry have approv'd his Leontidas, whose Judgement alone will secure him the Admirations of Poetry. What, O ye Sons of Liberty would be your Lo's, if Envy and Detraction should prevail against the Cause of Sparta! Be it your Comfort, that the most ingenious Patriots are Advocates for Leontidas, and that Selim the Persian is transformed into a Spartan. — Spartam, quam nati sunt, ostentant. — But, as I wish the Young Men well, I wish, that their Writings and their Speeches were as Laconic as their Principles.
